Math professors express displeasure with process used to hire head of department

By Barbara Ramirez
Panther Staff

Faculty members of the mathematics department have expressed concern about the procedure followed by the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, Dr. Gerard Rambally, when hiring the head of the math department, Dr. Aliakbar Hahghighi.

"What happened is that, he [Rambally] has been very anxious to hire new people ever since he's taken over the position," said Dr. Evelyn Thornton, professor of mathematics. She continued, "In our particular department, we didn't even know we were looking for a department head. I think what he did—he had some of his people call several people here in our department who are not tenured — people who haven't been here long.

In fact, there was only one person who was tenured. It was during the summer, most of us were not here during the summer—I thought that was a little ridiculous."

Thornton, a former head of the department, was baffled that the committee to hire the head consisted of faculty members who weren't part of the math department. "The makeup of the committee was irregular, you should have a committee right in your department to select a department head.

The only people in our department on the committee were people who really didn't know what the procedure was. I understand that his assistant dean plus another person from the communications department and other people who weren't qualified to be on the committee were on the committee. What I learned from them is that they never had a meeting, they just came in and looked at things, and got information from each person about what they thought about it. So, we just didn't have any input at all. It's well known that we don't like it—a whole lot of people don't like it."

Thornton does not stand alone in expressing displeasure about the procedure in which the new head of the department was hired. Dr. Clinnon Harvey, associate professor of mathematics and the math coordinator for University College, also felt the procedure could have been done differently. He said, "I think some of the older people from the math department should have been on that committee.

"The person that was hired is probably a good person, but the process through which he was brought in was not the correct way to do it. The feeling of the math department is that the people who were selected hadn't been here long enough to really know the inner workings."

Dr. Laurette Foster, who is tenured, and was appointed to the committee, also shared her concerns. "When notification came I was on official medical leave and I am

Project director Lettie Raab of University College was "surprised by the turnout" at the informational briefing held Oct. 24 in the University College's theater.

The meeting, intended for probationary and suspended students, also introduced the university's transitional advisors, Moseka Adams, John Cochran and Moga Herndon.

"Transitional advisors help students with undeclared majors choose their academic schedules, which are primarily CORE classes," said Raab. "They also work with probationary students and assist the suspended students who are allowed to come back."

Transitional advisor Adams noted that although some students know what they want to major in they also "need a little help getting through the TASP obstacles."

"We want students to be successful by providing help, encouragement and motivation," said Adams. "We are one of your many resources here at Prairie View."

Transitional advisor Cochran and one of the speakers at the briefing discussed the importance of attending class and how absenteeism can "rob students of their ambition."

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) - Two female professors were shot Monday at the University of Arizona's School of Nursing, a university spokeswoman said. The college and nearby buildings were immediately evacuated as police investigated, said spokeswoman Lisa Wakefield. Wakefield said no other details were immediately available. University police declined to release any details. University Medical Center spokeswoman Kate Jensen confirmed the shootings and the victims were female but didn't know whether the victims were at the hospital.

Concerned citizen raises money for school

READLYN, Iowa (AP) - When it appeared budget cuts would end some activities at Wapsie Valley High School a local woman took matters into her own hands. Carlene Werner formed what is now the Wapsie Valley Education Foundation. "We can provide help that the school board can't," Werner said of the rural school district about 20 miles northeast of Waterloo. "With the lack of funds and the economy the way it is, this is a tough time for schools. We're just trying to help."

The foundation formed at the beginning of the school year and has a nine-person board. The foundation hopes to raise money to buy textbooks, pay for field trips and offer scholarships, Werner said. "This could make a big difference," said Superintendent Paul Bisgard. "Any time members of the community assist students and give them a chance to further their education, it's a definite boost."

Many questions, few answers

By Tenesia S. Mathews Editor-in-Chief

It seems that Halloween will be much more scarier than years past. Not only will Americans have to fret about ghosts, goblins, and witches flying around on brooms, but we will also have to think about the horrible idea that a possible war is in the making and America is at the forefront.

President George W. Bush seems to be going after Saddam Hussein, the President of Iraq, with a vengeance. The United States feels that Saddam has deceived and defied the will and resolutions of the United Nations Security Council.

Now that North Korea had just announced that it also has nuclear weapons the United States seems to be more at risk.

Will this Halloween be more frightful than ever because of the present talk of war throughout the country?

Are we safer now that the alleged snipers who hunted the D.C. area have been captured by authorities?

The United States is a superpower and has the world's best military. Does that mean that we are not at risk if a war is in the near future? How safe is homeland security, really? All of these questions have been at the back of most minds, but where are the answers?

Don't talk about it, be about it

In class discussions, I always hear my peers complaining about what's wrong with Prairie View, but what are you doing to change the situation? About a month ago, the SGA held a town hall meeting, and less than half of the student body showed up. Topics ranged from the violence in the Village to parking. The point of the meeting was to address your concerns about the campus and try to find solutions, but where were you?

For those of you who have gotten involved, thank you for your efforts. For those of you who keep complaining and just sit back and let things happen, shut up. So instead of sitting back and allowing things to go on as they have been, act on your word and do something to make a difference on campus. Don't talk about it, be about it.

Christina Johnson

Disgusted

I am disturbed about the commentary written by the editor-in-chief in the October 23rd edition of The Panther. Using this venue to air any personal grievances is irresponsible.

I am not a media expert but as a savvy consumer, even I know better! I do not understand the need for specificity on names. It is interesting that the name of the CA with the "list" was not mentioned. I wonder if permission was granted to include the names, which were in the opinion piece in the first place! If we are serious about "one PV" then the "us vs. them" mentality would not exist. The student newspaper would be a good place start.

Join organizations, like SGA and CAB, or become active within your department so your voice can be heard. Remember, there is power in numbers and if we all come together, things can and will change on this campus. The key is we must take the initiative to do something.

When the SGA holds town meetings, make it a point to attend. When administrators ask you what needs to change around campus, speak up instead of waiting to complain in class.

Have pride in Prairie View

By L'Rhonda Boyd

News Editor

Have you ever noticed that the first time you meet Morehouse, Spelman, or Howard alumni, the first thing that they say to you is that they are graduates of one of these institutions?

For instance if you ever come in contact with a graduate of Morehouse, he will refer to himself as a "Morehouse Man". It is instances like this one that people see your pride in your alma mater.

Does this happen when you meet a PV graduate and if it doesn't, then why not?

So maybe our school is not as nationally recognized as some others or maybe our list of celebrity alumni isn't as long as the rest. Does that mean that we shouldn't carry the same amount of pride as the rest?

The sad part about this entire subject is the comparison between students' pride in their university and pride in their former high schools.

At any given time you can hear students "representing" their high schools. Some of these students haven't revisited or even seen their high schools since they graduated from them. So why is it that some students will nearly start a fight if you disrespect their high schools but will not blink twice if you disrespect this historic university?

Another sad situation is the amount of pride students have in an organization, compared to the amount of pride in the school they had to attend in order to become a part of that organization.

Just think, students with no pride in their university will become alumni with no pride in their alma mater.

Torrie Richardson, Senior, Chemical Engineering

sure they knew I was on medical leave when they selected me. So, I never officially served on the committee," said Foster. Dr. Foster said she informed Dr. Anil Kumar, committee chair, about her inability to serve on the committee because of medical leave, but got no response from him. "I did email Dr. Kumar and ask him to replace me with a tenured faculty member from the math department—but I don't know if he ever did," said Foster. She continued, "I didn't even know that we were in the process of searching for a department head. I don't think the department was considered at all. I think the department and students should have had some input."

Dr. Frank Hawkins, professor of mathematics, shared similar feelings about the hiring of the new head of the math department. "To begin, the faculty handbook has a well defined process for recruiting, interviewing, and finding faculty members. That process, in relation to the mathematics department was violated. The manner in which Dean Rambally organized the committee to search for the department head was inappropriate—it was not in the best interest of the department of mathematics."

Hawkins said, "Each department should identify its committee for selecting/recruiting faculty members. This was not done. Dr. Rambally had unilaterally decided that he would pick the people that would serve on the committee. There were two, perhaps three at the most, from the math department on the committee. I'm sure that two were not tenured faculty members. It is so unfortunate that this department has suffered."

Dr. E. Joanne Thomas-Smith, provost and vice president of academic affairs, responded to faculty concerns last week. "I am aware of the fact that there are faculty, particularly senior faculty, who took issue with the search process for the head of the department of mathematics. I took issue with it. I called the dean to ask why he had chosen not to have one of the math faculty members serve as the chair.

He told me that he really felt that the nature of the job could be done by the person he had chosen and that he could depend pretty heavily on that person. And, the truth is, it is his prerogative to choose who is going to be on the search committee." She continued, "Personally I felt that a person in mathematics should have headed the committee but that is my personal opinion. There is no legally binding rule that says it has to be. But good practice in higher education says that it should have been headed by one of the persons in the math department."

Commenting on discrepancies in the process, Thomas-Smith said, "Apparently somewhere along the way, we discovered, Mr. Tempton and I, that there had been virtually two searches and that's where the problem came. They started a search, and according to the chairman, they did not have enough applicants. So, they really should have voided that search completely and have written to all the persons who applied and said to them—we're ending the search, we're going to do this all over again, and then asked them if they wanted to be considered by the second committee. But we were late discovering this."

Thomas-Smith also discussed plans to deal with the problem. "It was not fair to the person who had been told to come, that he had a job, and to have, that person's life destroyed by finding out, here it is September, and he doesn't have a job after all." She continued, "Faculty really can't undo the process, there were some flaws in it's over and it appears from what I understand that he met the qualifications that they published in their position announcement."

The Panther did make an effort to talk to Dean Rambally but his office said he was unavailable for comment. The names of the professors who served on the committee are: Dr. Arouna Davies, Dr. Nader Kouhestani, Dr. Anil Kumar (committee chair), Dr. Jean-Paul Pemba, Dr. John Sullivan, and Dr. Johnson Wetiba.

probation doesn't define who you are. It says what you're doing, but you can change by being motivated and focused," said Cochran. "A lot of you work on the job and will work your butts off to get paid, but it's the same thing here. You just haven't gotten a check yet. Our only goal is for you to succeed."

Freshman Kandace Collins noted that the transitional advisors have steered her in the right direction.

"I've done a lot better this semester, and I'm more focused in my schoolwork," Collins said.

According to Raab, the briefing was essential and informative for students who had no prior knowledge of the transitional advisors.

"Students needed to know that there is a place where they can go and people who they can talk to who will be fair and supportive, but won't coddle them," said Raab. "My transitional advisors are wonderful people and put in time, their own resources and are very caught up in 'what can we do?'"

Is Smith the greatest runner?

By Andrew Roberts
Sports Writer

Barry Sanders would have most likely broken Walter Payton's all-time rushing record two years ago if he had continued to play football. Sanders chose to retire instead. This past weekend Emmitt Smith broke the record against the Seattle Seahawks. Most of Emmitt Smith's yardage came in his first ten years in the league.

The Dallas Cowboys "Hogs", as John Madden used to call them would dominate opposing defensive lines making running much easier for Smith. Nate Newton, Larry Allen, Mark Stepnowski, and Eric Williams were four of the best linemen at their respective positions. For the majority of his career Smith got to run behind these all-pro linemen. Payton and Sanders did not have such luck.

For most of his career Payton was a one man show. Many of his highlights are runs where he had to break six and seven tackles to score. Sanders never had a good offensive line with the Detroit Lions but he made up for it with his quickness and speed. Can you imagine Barry Sanders playing for the Cowboys during their championship years running behind the same offensive line Smith had?

We will never know what could have been had Sanders kept playing. For the record it really doesn't matter. The only thing that does matter is the fact that Smith has taken the crown. Smith has been very durable throughout his career. He has put in hard work season after season. He is one of the best backs of all-time but not the best back of all-time.

P.D. not enough motivation for PV to win Southern's 364 yards passing too much for P.V. to overcome

Andrew Roberts
Sports Writer

One of Prairie View's biggest games of the year brought out the stars Saturday night. Rapper/ Producer Sean "P. Diddy" Combs was in attendance to watch Prairie View take on the Southern Jaguars.

Prairie View would start the game off on a good note forcing Southern to go three and out on their first possession. Southern punted the ball on fourth down to the PV 44 yard line.

Prairie View's offense started the game off hitting on all cylinders driving the ball down the field against Southern's defense with ease. A Reginald Robinson rush moved the ball down to the Southern 9 yard line. The drive was capitalized with an eight yard Deshaun Baker touchdown run, the extra point was good giving P.V. the first lead of the game 7-0.

On Southern's next possession their offense finally began to have success moving the ball against Prairie View's defense. Southern would score their first touchdown on a 1 yard touchdown rush. The extra point was good and the score was now at 7-7.

On their second offensive possession Prairie View offense began to go flat. On third and fourteen Baker was sacked for a five yard loss. On fourth down P.V. opted to punt the ball. Baker punted the ball down to Southern's 49 yard line where Southern would start their next drive.

Southern would score on their next two consecutive possessions. Scoring on a twenty - three yard touchdown pass and a one yard touchdown rush. The defense would give P.V. their next scoring opportunity after a Sidney Taylor interception.

Damon Bankston broke for an 18 yard run on first and ten moving the ball to Southern's twenty-one yard line. Prairie View would progress the ball to the South-

attempt. The 37 yard attempt was unsuccessful. The Prairie View offense would start their next possession from their own twenty yard line.

After a costly penalty and a even more costly sack receiver was stopped short of the first down marker by Sidney Taylor after a completion.

Prairie View would get on the board again on their next possession. Behind the quarterbacking of Joseph Vaughn Prairie View marched down field. Vaughn would rush for thirty-two yards on the scoring drive. The drive was capitalized with one yard touchdown run by Damon Bankston. Prairie View's two point conversion was unsuccessful and the score was now 40-16.

Prairie View's defense forced Southern to punt the ball away on their next possession. Prairie View would punt the ball back to Southern setting Southern's final touchdown.

Prairie View would score their final touchdown on a spectacular seventy yard dash by runningback Otis Carter. Carter outran the entire Southern defense downfield for the score. The run was Prairie View's longest touchdown run of the season. The final score was 46-24. Prairie View will be on the road to Mississippi this weekend still looking for their first SWAC victory. GO PANTHERS!!!!

Quarterback Deshaun Baker avoids a Southern defender.

Southern added seven points to their lead after a 21 yard touchdown pass with 9:39 left in the first half. Prairie View's secondary was tested throughout the game. Most of Southern's long plays came off pass completions.

Southern would score again on a sixty yard fake punt with 1:35 remaining in the half. The first half ended with P.V. trailing Southern 34-10.

P.V. would start the first drive of the half on their own twenty five yard line. PV went three and out and punted the ball on fourth down.

Prairie View's defense came out holding strong forcing Southern to a field goal

P.V. was forced to punt the ball once again. On first and ten Southern's quarter back completed a thirty two yard pass to his receiver putting the ball on the P.V. 6 yard line. The drive would end on a six yard touchdown pass completion. The score was now 40-10.

Now down by thirty the Panthers desperately needed a scoring drive. Their next possession would end with quarterback Joseph Vaughn being sacked for a three yard loss on fourth down and eight.

Southern's offense would share a similar fate on their next possession. Southern chose to go for it on fourth down and thirteen. Southern's

While listening to 97.9 The Box, a local hip hop radio station in Houston, I was astonished by the news I heard. Upcoming record label Murder Inc. producer Irv Gotti was reprimanding an artist who mixed hip hop and R&B. Gotti claims that he originated the two types of music with artists such as Ja Rule (rapper) and Ashanti (R&B). While Ja Rule and Ashanti are an okay combination, they are not originators of this type of music.

One of the originators of this type of collaboration is Mary J. Blige (queen of R&B) and hip hop icon P-Diddy. Not only didn't Gotti start this popular trend he didn't even perfect it. If your first CD came out in 2000 you haven't invented anything, but you should try to perfect those stale duets with Ja and Ashanti.

Hearing others' music and recognizing good sounds and lyrics are a part of maturity that helps you advance in a competitive career. This whole issue stems around the collaborative efforts of Jay Z (rapper) and Beyonce Knowles (R&B) with the remake of Me and My Girlfriend by late legendary rapper Tupac. While Jay Z and Beyonce's remake was not very good there shouldn't be any stipulations on who you choose to cut a track with.

In retrospect Irv Gotti, you haven't been in the game long enough to add your likes and dislikes. The best thing for you to do is continue to produce those "copy cat" collaborative efforts you've been doing.

A black sista's poem

Author Unknown

I can see right past your intricate masks
Give a sophisticated answer to any question you ask Raise one or ten children through struggle and strife
Run a major corporation and be a supportive wife
Converse with the 'Big Wigs' or 'Holla atcha in the hood'

Say "Absolutely Wonderful!" or "Haay, It's all good!"
Put you in your place without saying much
I'm an intellectual Black Sista,
So address me as such

Possessing the strength of the strongest foundation
My voice speaks volumes heard throughout the nation

My hands grasp doubt and turn it into hope
And these hands have cut society's "Limitation Rope"
Because there is no limit on the strength that I possess
The force of my power can be felt with one touch

I'm a strong Black Sista, So address me as such

My heart contains love in its purest form
Unconditional, absolute, and every-day reborn
My love can surpass the most grueling test
It supplies assurance where there is unrest

My love bonds, shapes, molds, and holds
It begins from birth, to "Infinity Years Old"
You can even feel it without physical touch
I'm a loving Black Sista,
So address me as such

The passion that is swelling, brewing inside
Rises to my surface, it never hides
Whether it's displayed when I take a stand
Or when it's seductively unveiled for man
Its intensity is unrestrained and uninhibited

And just like my strength, it is unlimited
It can be overwhelming for some; it's a bit much
I'm a passionate Black Sista
So address me as such Intellectual, strong, loving, and passionate

Sophisticated, powerful, affectionate, immaculate
I'm not your hoochie, your bitty, or your 304

I'm the center of life more than you'll ever know
I'm your sister, auntie, friend, niece, and your mother
And I stand beside you not behind you my brother

I come in different shapes, shades, and sizes
And no one can deny me when this sista rises
My style is very captivating

thank you very much
I'm a beautiful Black Sista,

The black book market is booming. Authors such as E. Lynn Harris (Just as I am), Eric Jerome Dickey, (Liars Game, Cheaters) and Omar Tyree (Fly Girl), have taken the black book market and made it work for them. However, a woman has been put on the front line and she is taking her readers for a ride.

Zane, author of Addicted, has her fans "addicted" to her writing

Zane kidnaps her readers and take them beyond social taboos with her story of a successful African-American art dealer named Zoe Reynard who is addicted to sex and her equally successful husband, architect Jason Reynard who has some emotional issues of his own.

The story opens with Zoe opening herself emotionally to Dr. Marcella Spencer, a psychiatrist she hired to help her with an addiction that was bound to tear her apart emotionally, jeopardize her marriage to the man of her dreams and land her in a fatal attraction. The story is told from Zoe's point of view from the day she met her husband at 11 years old.

Zoe's addiction to sex spirals out of control as she gets involved in three extramarital affairs. Although Zoe is clearly interested in just sex, the people she has gotten involved with want more and the ultimate price Zoe has to pay for her indiscretions could cost her her life or the lives of the people she loves.

Addiction is a story about overcoming an addiction some of the characters in the book didn't even know existed, unconditional love and uncovering repressed emotions that can be destructive.

Zane did a good job convincing the reader that despite her indiscretions, Zoe loved her husband unconditionally. She wanted help and sought it before it was too late. Zane definitely takes the reader into the mind of the protagonist Zoe by penning her every thought. Although the book is full of violence, and sex, the moral is not hard to find.

Zane even takes the reader into other issues, such as domestic violence and the repression of emotional issues. However, I was a little disappointed when she didn't touch on the physical repercussions of casual sex. Nevertheless, Addicted by Zane is a page-turning, suspense that will leave the reader addicted.
